Not a Nice Girl.

He took her out in supper
From the play;
He had to tell her
Every day.
His pocketbook was slim.
But he did not mind.
And she ate and smiled at him.
As a grateful maiden should.
But she met another fellow
The next day.
And she ridiculed the supper
And the play.
The boy had done his best
With the little that he had.
It was she who was to blame.
He remembered and was glad!

An Exchange Party.

Philadelphia Telegraph.
Did you ever attend an exchange party? If you get the right people together it's just one of the most amusing forms of entertainment met with in a season of nonstop card parties, luncheons, dances and the like, says a writer in an Eastern paper.
When sending out the invitations, it is wise perhaps to add a note of explanation that the guests are expected to bring some article they wish to get rid of. The invitations can help along the explanation by being adorned with clever drawings of all sorts and conditions of packages. If one can use the brush and pen, she can do this herself; if not, a friend generally be found with some sketching ability.
When the guests have arrived, each with a package, the fun of the evening begins by trying to exchange these. If the guests have caught the idea, they have made their packages just as alluring looking as possible, so as easily to find customers. They, too, may sound the praise of their wares in all ways short of actual misrepresentation. If a package is a glib tongue much fun is to be had in this part of the proceedings, for the more mystery and charm one can throw around the treasure on hand the better.
After the exchange is made, the new owner is privileged to look at his bargain. If he likes it, he can keep it; if not, he doesn't like it, which is far more probable, he carefully wraps it up again and tries once more to dispose of it to the unsuspecting. And thus the merry battle goes on. At the end of the evening the packages not yet finding willing owners are put up at auction, and amid much laughter, finally find buyers, the material wherewith to purchase them being provided by the hostess in the form of beans or any such small articles. These can be given each guest in a small, pretty bag, which could be kept as a souvenir.
The entertainment, done for charity, the money received at the auction would, of course, be used for the object in view. The small admission could be charged as well if thought best.
Of course, much of the fun depends upon the articles supplied. One should take very good care to select articles which are as laughable, odd, or desirable as possible, and wrap them so as to thoroughly deceive the one you are trying to induce to exchange with you.

MIND AND FOOD

Kind of Food That Affects the Mind.
"One of the most remarkable effects of the food Grape-Nuts is on the mind; it makes one feel buoyant, hopeful and cheerful," says Alice L. Glunt, of 242 Broad street, Altoona, Pa. She continues: "As a result of prolonged mental work, I was stricken with paralysis of the right side about two years and a half ago. For about two years I was treated constantly with powerful drugs to stimulate the nerve centers, with only partial success. About six months ago, I was threatened with nervous prostration again, when a friend advised me to eat Grape-Nuts food. I was entirely skeptical concerning any beneficial results, but finding the food very palatable, I bought a package after another, and since beginning the use of Grape-Nuts have taken no medicine, and nerve tonics of any kind, and the effect of the perfect food on my health is something very remarkable. The nervous system, and a disagreeable cough, and my symptoms of paralysis have disappeared. I have suffered from all the ills that I have lived just as thousands of others who think I am well fed, but are in a state of semi-starvation, owing to imperfect assimilation of food. The nerve centers, except by good food and food that can be digested and assimilated. Grape-Nuts food is the most perfect food I have ever seen, and I know of its value from practical results."
This is another evidence of the fact that Grape-Nuts food contains the phosphate of potash which unites with the albumen to make the gray matter in the nerve centers and brain. Any brain worker who values health, strength and vigor, should pay heed to the character of food he uses.
